The second speaker of the day was Krishna Sur, owner of Krishna Sur's Creation, Durgapur, a small boutique in the city of Durgapur, West Bengal, India. She started a small business in a dimly lit studio in our garage many years ago because I loved creating and designing. Through the years, her business grew (mostly through word of mouth) into an enterprise that not only promotes local artisans but also trains and empowers women from neighbouring villages. She shared her experience of perseverance for 42 years and the effort and energy she gathered during her journey.

This was followed by a small dance and a skit by the final-year students presenting the power of women in any work of life, including entrepreneurial skills. This was then followed by the next and final speaker, Mrs. Payel Bajoria. Mrs. Bajoria is a fashion designer, and her brand's name is 'Miharu.' She is an entrepreneur who works with the local artisans of her district, Bankura in West Bengal. Born and brought up in Siliguri, West Bengal, after completing her schooling from there, she did her graduation and a two-year Diploma course in Fashion Designing from New Delhi. She had always been a creative person, and that's why she wanted to go into a creative field. She grew up in a business family where there was never any shortage of anything, and hence earning money was never a necessity for her. She got married in Bankura district. But, after marriage, she didn't want to be just a housewife. Along with taking care of her family, she also wanted to give purpose to her life. In her struggle to find that purpose, she saw the amazing work done by the local artisans there, and that's when she decided to go for it. And after fifteen years of her marriage, she launched her brand, Miharu. She works with Dhokra artisans, where Dhokra is a four thousand-year-old craft, and they make jewellery and corporate gifts for corporate clients. She was felicitated by the FOSMI award for the Best Female Entrepreneur by Dr. APJ Abdul Kalam. She also comes among the top hundred women selected by the MSME Board. Mrs. Bajoria shared her rich experiences and shared the story of her journey.
